Innocent Oyori Nyang’au

LLB, LL.M, & Advocate of The High Court of Kenya.

Lecturer School of Natural Resources Maasai Mara University

Abstract.

This chapter delves into the dynamic interplay between the evolution of international environmental law and its profound influence on Kenya’s environmental governance framework. By tracing the historical development of global environmental agreements and their ratification by Kenya, this chapter explores how international norms, conventions, and treaties have shaped the nation’s legislative landscape. Analyzing case studies and policy implementations, it investigates the transformative impact of these international legal instruments on Kenya’s environmental regulations, resource management practices, and sustainable development initiatives. The chapter also examines challenges faced and lessons learned, highlighting the relationship between Kenya’s commitment to international environmental standards and its efforts to foster local environmental conservation, biodiversity protection, and climate change resilience. Through an exploration of legal frameworks and practical implications, this chapter provides valuable insights into the fusion of international ideals and local imperatives, shedding light on the holistic approach required for effective environmental governance in the 21st century.

2.0. The Genesis of International Environmental Law.

Many people make a general assumption about the character of international law especially international environmental law without giving serious thought to its history and character. It is tempting to think that international law the precursor to international Environmental law is and always has been a sham. There is a general assumption too that any person can intuitively make opinions about the subject of international environmental law without much difficulty as persons make general inquiries about other subjects’ relevant facts.<sup>1</sup> The development and evolution of international environmental law is part of a greater transformation of the subject of international law in the
