Emil Ruder
(1914 – 1975)

Typography instructor at the Allgemeine Schweizerische Kunstschule Basel (Basel School of Design), believed in balance between form and function, taught that type takes its purpose when it takes its communicative meaning; legibility and readability are dominant concerns; sensitivity to negative or unprinted spaces; advocated systematic overall design and the use of a grid structure to bring all elements—typography, photography, illustration, diagrams, and charts—into harmony with each other while allowing for design variety.

Max Bill
(1908 – 1994)

Work encompassed painting, architecture, engineering, sculpture, and product and graphic design; studied at the Bauhaus; concepts of art conceived, a universal aim of absolute clarity based on contrasted mathematical construction; constructed layouts of geometric elements organized with absolute order; mathematical proportion; geometric spatial division; and the use of balancing (Grosz): type are features of his work of this period.

Josef Müller-Brockmann
(1914 – 1996)

Leading theorist and practitioner of the Swiss movement; sought an absolute and universal form of graphic expression through objective and impersonal presentation; communicated to the audience without the interference of the designer's subjective feelings or propagandistic techniques of persuasion; photographic problems treat the image as an objective symbol, with neutral photographs gaining impact through scale and camera angle; language of Constructivism creates a visual counterpoint to the structural harmony; universal design harmony achieved by mathematical spatial division.

Armin Hoffmann
(b. 1920)

Taught graphic design at the Basel School of Design; applied deep aesthetic values and understanding of form to both teaching and designing; evolved a design philosophy based on the elemental graphic form; language of point, line, and plane, replacing traditional pictorial ideas with a modernist aesthetic.
