Navigation Buttons

- skimming and scanning for an overview of the entire text
- recognizing the importance of headings, keywords, diagrams, illustrations
- writing a summary based on information provided (text comprehension)

Important Variables

Title, topic, headings, bold-face print, italicized print, key words, diagrams, photographs, illustrations, equations

REFERENCES

1. Explain to the class that they will be reading a selection titled Bees, and that they'll be learning some strategies for how to read more effectively in order to glean the most information from the piece.
2. Prior to reading and analyzing the text, project the Virtuous Field Trip Sheet to build context and background knowledge on the topic and introduce students to new vocabulary. (Project Virtuous Field Trip Scavenger when you're ready to read and analyze that text.) Discuss what, if any, prior knowledge they might have on the topic.
3. Photocopy pp. 37-38 or pp. 39-40, and distribute copies to the class and project on the white board. Then, ask them to listen carefully as you read the piece aloud to them. (This is particularly important for students who may have difficulty reading the piece independently.) This will give them a sense of what the text is all about.
4. Explain that, before they read an expository piece, it's important to look for certain cues that can provide valuable information to aid the reader's understanding. Direct their attention to the piece and ask them to annotate it together, labeling the important parts. Use the Strategic Reading Guidelines to inform your discussion. A Reference Page of these questions follows this lesson, pp. 42-43.
