Technology Paul S. Herrnson, Richard G. Niemi, Michael J. Hanmer, 2009-03-19 Voting difficulties hung over America's presidential election in 2000 like a dark cloud. Hanging chads, a butterfly ballot, and the Supreme Court remain the most vivid memories of that political donnybrook. Passage of 2002's Help America Vote Act sparked further interest in the physical process of casting a ballot, yet several recent contests still produced confusion at the polls. A solution to at least some of those problems may be found in new technology, but such innovations carry their own concerns and questions. Voting Technology is the first book to investigate in a scientific and authoritative manner how voters respond to the new equipment. The authors, an interdisciplinary group of experts in American elections, political behavior, human-computer interaction, and human factors psychology, assess five commercially available voting systems, each one representing a specific class based on shared design principles as well as a prototype system not currently available. They evaluate the systems against different criteria, including ease of use, speed, and accuracy, using field experiments, laboratory experiments, and expert reviews. The results reveal the good and bad about the new systems, including specific features that contribute to clarity, confusion, or error. Going beyond the concern with spoiled ballots, they determine whether voters actually cast their ballots for the candidates they intended to support. They address fundamental questions of whether voters like and trust the equipment and whether the various systems are equally usable by all voters. Their research also opens up an entirely new line of inquiry by asking about the interaction between ballot format and voter behavior. The concluding chapter pulls together best practices that will guide manufacturers of voting systems, ballot designers, election officials, political observers, and, of course, voters. In a political system based on free exercise of personal choice, the least we can do is to learn from history.

Beecher's Recitations and Readings Alvah C. Beecher, 1874      Resources in Education, 1998      Computers and the Teaching of Writing in American Higher Education, 1979-1994 Gail E. Hawisher, 1996 This book is a history composed of histories. Its particular focus is the way in which computers entered and changed the field of composition studies, a field that defines itself both as a research community and as a community of teachers. This may have a somewhat sinister suggestion that technology alone has agency, but this history made of histories is not principally about computers. It is about people—the teachers and scholars who have adapted the computer to their personal and professional purposes. From the authors' perspectives, change in technology drives changes in the ways we live and work and we agents to a degree in control of our own lives use technology to achieve our human purposes. REVIEW This book reminds those of us now using computers to teach writing where we have been and it brings those who are just entering the field up to date. More important, it will inform administrators, curriculum specialists, and others responsible for implementing the future uses of technology in writing instruction. Computers and Composition      New England Journal of Education, 1897      New Speeches, Dialogues and Recitations for Young Children Mrs. Russell Kavanaugh, 1884      The Publishers' Trade List Annual, 1875      New England Journal of Education Thomas Williams Bicknell, Albert Edward Winship, Anson Wood Belding, 1904      Temperance Dialogues Designed for the Use of Schools, Temperance
