

William Blake

[1757-1827]

poem reflects Blake's growing and years on England and England critique of industrial revolution and how it affected workers how London is dirty and corrupt

London

1 I wander through each charter'd street,
Near where the charter'd Thames does flow,

And mark in every face I meet

Marks of weakness, marks of woe.

repetition - all four lines start with 'I' and 'near' and 'and' and 'marks' -> emphasis on the speaker's journey and the state of the city

even the river is named repetition - 'charter'd' -> suggests they have no freedom, and are controlled by the state marks of weakness, marks of woe -> suggests the state of the people and the state of the city -> they can be freed from societal restrictions

2 In every cry of every man

In every infirmity of fall

The mind-forg'd manacles I hear repetition - 'every' -> suggests the state of the people and the state of the city -> they can be freed from societal restrictions mind-forg'd manacles -> suggests the state of the people and the state of the city -> they can be freed from societal restrictions

How the chimney-sweepers cry

Every blackning church appells

And the hapless soldier's sigh

Runs in blood down palace walls

And through midnight streets I hear

How the youthful warriors' curse

Runs the new-born infants' tear

And blights with plagues the marriage hearse repetition - 'how' -> suggests the state of the people and the state of the city -> they can be freed from societal restrictions

mind-forg'd manacles -> suggests the state of the people and the state of the city -> they can be freed from societal restrictions
