

M-S SPEAKER SYSTEM

BY REID WOODBURY

You can add this design to your "gee wiz" stack of novelty speakers. It is based on the M-S (middle-side) stereo making technique, which is popular for many reasons, but few people seem to understand how this method realizes stereo signals.

The secret with the singular stereo speaker I designed is that the front driver receives the sum of the left and right channels, and the difference is sent to the rear drivers, which are wired out-of-phase, like the M-S microphone (see "Theory"). My original belief was that the left and right channel program material would bower to the left and right of the speaker, but no such luck. I've discovered it's similar to Lauridsen's method (Fig. 1) for producing pseudo-stereo from a mono source¹ which my speaker does with some success. However, my single speaker does have an incredible sense of depth.

The M-S is my first and only speaker construction project and I continue to startle friends with the sound.

ORIGINAL DESIGN. I came up with the design in 1983, reflecting that I was rarely positioned front and center while listening to my stereo system, but either working on some project, homework, cleaning or cooking, and not positioned optimally to hear the stereo image, often being in the next room. My design produces the same acoustic energy as standard stereo, and since I am generally economical, I figured I shouldn't pay for more speakers than I absolutely needed. For normal stereo I'd just wear headphones.

I started this project just prior to subscribing to Speaker Builder. I'd never built any kind of furniture and most of the electronic projects I'd ever finished were kits. I modified my original design as my reading and building experience progressed.

DRIVER SELECTION. I chose drivers only by specs, reputation, and by listening to similar drivers. These weren't my first choices, and in some cases the third or fourth choice, due to availability at the time.

The "front" drivers use a standard three-way design with a Thack/Small aligned enclosure. The recommended enclosure specifications were supplied by the retailer (McCoy Radio & Electronics), which I found very useful and fit closely with Bullock and White's BOXRESPONSE program.^{2,3}

2. Bullock, Robert M. and Bob White, "Box Response," JB 1:84, pp. 12-18, 42.

3. I took the Bullock and White program and typed it into a powerful spreadsheet program which has built-in graphing (ExcelTM for the Macintosh). I've spent many hours subtly changing a speaker enclosure's parameters with a particular driver and studying the results and frequency response graphs. I modified the input of the program, i.e., instead of entering the compliance/box volume ratio, I enter just the box volume and the spreadsheet calculates the ratio. I enlarged my enclosure slightly and I always use the 30Hz random filter to my program as the program suggests.
