Hayward,1998 By the time Hitler declared war on the Soviet Union in 1941 he knew that his military machine was running out of fuel In response he launched Operation Blau a campaign designed to protect Nazi oilfields in Romania while securing new ones in the Caucasus All that stood in the way was Stalingrad    The Journal of the Armed Forces ,1872    Armour and Company V. Chapman,1982 Consists of summaries and translations from the War diaries of Joachim Lietzmann and Paul W Wenneker as well as original text by the editor    Steel Ships, Iron Crosses, and Refugees Charles Koburger,1989-10-11 Steel Ships Iron Crosses and Refugees documents the German navy's role in the Baltic including the final epic amphibious lift in the Baltic and the world's two largest maritime disasters The small German Navy and Merchant Marines evacuated over 2 000 000 refugees wounded and troops by sea without adequate air support and while under Russian fire During the evacuation the torpedoing of Wilhelm Gustloff and GOYA alone resulted in the loss of 12 000 lives The magnitude of the loss is overwhelming when compared to Titanic 1 500 dead and Lusitania 1 200 dead Yet at the end one out of every 20 West Germans was free because of this effort Focusing our attention on a little known chapter of modern naval history this study demonstrates the critical role of sea power and the interrelationship of navy and merchant marine It also repeats an oft forgotten lesson on the special characteristics of inshore waters and warfare Few people know of the Baltic Naval Campaign 1939-1945 which culminated in the tremendous rescue operation that evacuated over 2 000 000 people ahead of the advancing Red Army The Germans suffered the two largest maritime disasters on record The already battered German navy was almost totally destroyed during this last campaign Suggesting that a knowledge of this great humanitarian effort might balance our historical perspective this volume also reinforces many basic truths concerning the importance and use of sea power    World War II German Military Studies: Part IV.
