

Sample Size

50 families; 70 children; 90 parents.

Data Collection

The research is based on interviews with respondents and related studies.

Researcher's Findings

The collected data allows to conclude that advertising has a lasting impact on adolescents' mentality. The majority of parents are concerned with this problem and are ready to take measures to decrease the negative effects of advertisement on their children's development and increase the positive effects.

Researcher's Recommendations

Parents should be more aware of the content of information that their children can get from the advertising. Trust within families can be achieved through mutual communication regarding not only media but other spheres of the adolescents' life.

Governmental measures should also be taken. Special committees might control the advertising agencies and media houses in order to encourage the broadcasting of high-quality content and decrease the number of advertisements that can be harmful for adolescents' mentality.
