A diagram of a human arm, showing the skeletal structure. The arm is extended horizontally. The elbow joint is highlighted with a red circle and a red arrow pointing to it. The diagram is labeled with 'Elbow' and 'Joint'.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group consisted of 20 women who participated in a supervised walking program, 3 times per week, for 12 weeks. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the program. The primary outcome was the change in the physical and psychological health of the women in the intervention group compared with the control group. The secondary outcome was the change in the physical and psychological health of the women in the intervention group compared with the control group. The results of the study showed that the women in the intervention group had a significant improvement in physical and psychological health compared with the control group. The results of the study also showed that the women in the intervention group had a significant improvement in physical and psychological health compared with the control group. The results of the study also showed that the women in the intervention group had a significant improvement in physical and psychological health compared with the control group.
