Guidebook: Digital Nudging for Sustainable Consumer Delivery Choices Michael Thelen, Alexander Planitzer, Dorina Tósaki, 2025-10-28 Local policy makers and regulators e g city representatives and logistics providers are faced with the challenge of promoting sustainable logistics in order to reduce CO2 emissions improve air quality reduce noise alleviate traffic congestion and make suburban and urban areas more livable However the use of supply side measures e g the procurement of clean delivery vehicles must be accompanied by aligned demand side measures to promote encourage and incentivise consumers to choose these options when it is offered to them In the context of online shopping such demand side measures can take the form of digital nudges on online shops to subtly guide shoppers to choose the sustainable delivery option which operate without restrictions or bans. A certain level of infrastructure e.g. cargo bikes pick up stations and parcel lockers need to be there for people to use it. However, understanding and fostering the public's personal capabilities and motivations is also paramount. The purpose of this guidebook is to provide a comprehensive, actionable approach to designing digital interventions that promote sustainable consumer delivery choices on e-commerce sites. By applying the insights and tools within the guidebook, it seeks to support the creation of more sustainable, efficient and consumer friendly logistics systems. This guidebook was produced as part of the SuCoLo project which has been funded by the Austrian Federal Ministry of Climate Action, Environment, Energy, Mobility, Innovation and Technology under the Driving Urban Transitions Partnership which has been co-funded by the European Union under grant agreement no 905465.
