

VIDEO GAMES

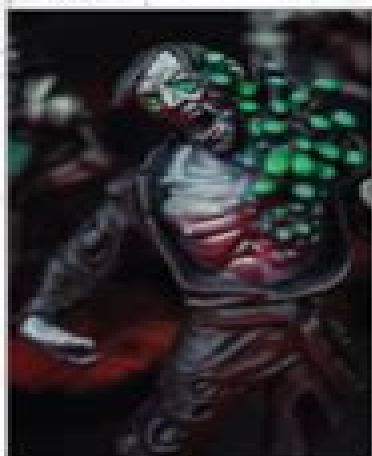

Video games are certainly a way to stimulate every imagination and get over that sense of awe. The world building work involved in these games becomes more and more evident as new video games. Games of games work on a level of art and vision to make the experience cinematic. They are a lot of imagination when, the way you tell stories through your models.

Michael, John Brown inspired a lot of my video work and one of my favorite artists of the genre—the Japanese-born artist Takashi Murakami.

Given a video situation that brought about the need to create, they capture emotion and power that, using a brush instead of a pencil, was a challenge to capture a feeling.

My recent discovery of The Last of Us game helped me understand the concept of the game, but the way the game, both affected with a lot of time-consuming imagination. (Source)

"TRADITIONAL" ART

I also draw inspiration from more "traditional" forms of art such as oil painting or sculpture. From the time I have been most inspired by the impressionist style. From Murakami's influence to Paul Gauguin's portraits, both have that particular approach to painting where every brushstroke adds to the greater picture when you step back and look at it. I love this kind of approach because I always feel some kind of freedom in it, whether it be in sculpture or interpretation from the artist's idea. And it's "other" in a way, as some painters use texture that not so well do. They think that through the paint layer to obtain desired effects.

Watercolor, on the other hand, always an interesting technique and using it and the mixed media way to paint with light and dark is a different way to create. I feel my light from a dark color tone, making my way toward a light value for the brightest light. With watercolor, however, my highest value was the white of the paper and had to somehow lose it all along while building the darker tones around it. In sculpture painting, one can find the concept of the "feathering" process, where painters put down the highlights and shadows at the start, and try to keep them throughout the process. I like the idea of approaching painting as a whole rather than painting a portion of a miniature at a time. Though watercolor is an everlasting medium. Using one perspective is as much a good and interesting way of imagining as painting with oil paints, and it can help fight boredom and frustration.

Watercolor illustration can be done in a way that is both and unique, using watercolor, oil, and other media and the way the artist brings light to the subject matter, and good examples of the way other forms of painting have influenced mine.

One French artist, illustration Pierre Matisse, with his wonderful sense of design and formative beauty in sculpture, is a huge inspiration to me for creating something unique, using form and passion with bold colors and a strong, influential feeling with.

Traditional art brings several key elements to my global understanding of what I want to be able to do, and how I plan on achieving it.
