Ernst Utrecht,Transnational Corporations Research Project (University of Sydney),1984 Agricultural Development and Trade Liberalisation Renuka Mahadevan,John Asafu-Adjaye,2008 This book brings empirical analysis to bear on the policy debate on the economic and environmental impacts of agricultural trade liberalisation on a small developing country represented by the island of Fiji It is timely because many African Caribbean and Pacific ACP countries are faced with challenges in the years ahead as a result of globalisation and liberalisation of world trade Some ACP countries including Fiji have already signed an interim Economic Partnership Agreement EPA with the European Union to replace the Cotonou Agreement Other future changes in the trading regime are likely to come from the eventual conclusion of the Doha Round What is lacking in the current debate is solid empirical analysis to investigate the impacts of these policy changes What little analysis has been carried out lumps developing countries into regional aggregates Thus it may be argued that these studies do not take account of the individual countries circumstances The book focuses on the sugar industry to discuss the broad topic of agricultural reform Quantitative and qualitative methods are used to support the analysis and discussion in the areas of structural reform in the sugar and other industries as well as the effects of trade liberalisation strategies The empirical investigation is carried out using appropriate econometric techniques and a dynamic computable general equilibrium model The material is presented in such a way that the non technical reader will also benefit from the discussion which has policy making as its focus It should appeal to a wide readership including policymakers policy analysts researchers in industry and the public sector as well as postgraduate students in various fields such as agriculture and natural resources international trade and economic modelling
