Kohler,1995      Dynamic Tuning of Hydraulic Engine Mount Using Multiple Inertia Tracks Benjamin Daniel Barszcz,2010 Abstract Passive hydraulic engine mounts are commonly employed for motion control and vibration isolation in vehicle powertrain systems Such devices are often tuned in terms of their low frequency resonance and damping ratio say corresponding to the engine bounce mode to control noise and vibration and improve the ride comfort quality and safety of the vehicle Mount tuning concepts with one inertia track and one decoupler using the track length or diameter are well understood but the dynamic response with multiple tracks orifices or decouplers is not To overcome this void in the literature dynamic tuning concepts of hydraulic engine mounts with emphasis on multiple n inertia tracks fixed decoupler type designs are analytically and experimentally examined in this thesis Since a wide variety of n inertia track configurations is possible dynamic stiffness models are developed to explain a family of such configurations based on linear time invariant lumped fluid system theory Furthermore a new n track prototype mount concept is designed built and tested in a controlled manner with the capability of varying the type capillary tube orifice and number n of inertia tracks in addition to length and diameter of each This prototype is used to examine several designs with alternate n track configurations for improving performance compared to the n 1 track case Three narrowband devices are designed and tested to refine existing theory for predicting peak frequency of loss angle in addition to examining and validating an n 3 track mount for the first time Two broadband devices are designed and tested successfully by tuning damping ratios of the mount with orifice type tracks for the first time Several n track mount designs with orifice type tracks are also proposed which successfully describe a special broad tuned design utilizing a controlled leakage path flow area for the first time Lastly a quasi linear dynamic stiffness model is developed to study excitation amplitude and frequency dependent behavior of equivalent inertia track resistance which should lead to nonlinear models of track devices and improved adaptive or active mounts in future studies. Chief contributions of this work include experimentally validated extensions of prior lumped parameter linear time invariant dynamic stiffness models which are now applicable to predictions for narrow tuned and or broad tuned mounting devices with  $n$  greater than or equal to 2.

Analytical Investigation of the Dynamic Properties of Passive Engine Mounting Fazidah binti Saad, 2011. Engine mount is an automotive component that is essential in supporting the engine static state in order to prevent engine bounce from shock excitation and to isolate engine vibration caused by engine disturbances in the complete speed range. The main objective of this study is to analyze the dynamic properties which are the natural frequencies and modeshapes of different types of passive engine mounts. In this study four passive rubber engine mount models were considered. The modal analysis were computed by using finite element software ABAQUS and the results obtained were the modeshapes of the engine mounts. Modeshapes are the deflection shapes taken on by a system when excited at one of its natural frequencies. The corresponding modeshapes of all the rubber engine mount models were computed both in presence and absence of the engine's weight and the results are compared with the results from impact test which has been conducted to one of the engine mount. The computer simulated model of these mounts was analyzed and later the effect of the load applied on the engine mounts were compared with the engine mounts without the load. The results from the modal analysis demonstrated variety in the natural frequency values for all types of passive engine mounts. The modeshapes results showed the trend of bending mode, torsion mode and also the mixture of both. From the modeshapes results the most deformed spot in the engine mounts can be identified. The results showed that the engine mounting with more metal contact will have the highest frequency of 987.56 Hz when analyzed without the engine weight while the engine mount with less metal contact will have the highest frequency of 1456.20 Hz when analyzed with the engine weight. This shows that rubber engine mounts with the least metal contact design had the highest frequency value of all and this signifies that it can provide the best damper for the engine weight. As a conclusion the natural frequency of the passive engine mount depends strongly on the applied load although theoretically the natural frequency of a system should not be affected by the applied load. The variations happen because of the rubber viscoelastic nature. Besides that the natural frequency of the rubber engine mounts also depend on their designs as the least metal contact design showed higher natural frequency value. The results of this study will open up a passage to researchers to study and improve the elastomeric engine mounts.

Modeling and Control of Active Engine Mounts Ahmed Murgab Mohammed Mahil, 2014. The automobile industry has developed significantly through years and producing fuel efficient cars became the most important priority for automobile manufacturers and that will affect the cars weight to make them lighter using composites and alloys that is lighter than steel and have a better strength to weight ratio and therefore have a low fuel consumption and by utilizing efficient engine mounts powerful engines can be installed into light vehicles yet such mounts are seldom and the introduction of more powerful engines to lighter cars will cause more vibrations that will not likely be damped by the traditional mounts specifically the low frequency vibrations and that will affect the passengers comfort and health in order to remedy this quagmire active engine mounts were introduced the typical active engine mount consists of a rubber passive mount and a force actuator that will be activated at certain frequencies and generate a damping force approximately equal to the disturbance force thus these systems will reduce the amount of vibrations that reaches the passenger cabin more than the passive and semi active engine mount systems many control techniques has been investigated in order to enhance the performance of the active mounting yet most of the control techniques has been implemented on unrealistic models and it is seldom to find any realistic model of active engine mount In this dissertation classical and modern controllers has been introduced on three different models starting form two degree of freedom unrealistic model and then a moderately realistic four degree of freedom model and finally a realistic six degree of freedom model two control techniques were implemented on the different systems namely PID proportional integral derivative LQR linear quadratic regulator respectively then comparison was done between their simulation results and performance assessment for the controllers simulation results was conducted and showed a significant enhancement in isolating the vibrations of the engine from the car body      Modelling of Pneumatic Engine Mount ,2005
