

Fossils Study Guide

Vocabulary

fossil - trace or remains of a living thing that died long ago extinct - describes a kind of living thing that is no longer found on Earth. Dinosaurs are extinct.

cast- fossils that are formed when mud or minerals fill in a mold mold- the shape of a once-living thing left in sediment when the rock formed petrified wood - a fossil formed when the soft parts of a once-living plant are replaced by hard minerals trace fossils-fossils that are marks left behind, such as dinosaur tracks in mud. These fossils are formed when mud hardens and in time is changed to rock.

- Most fossils are found in sedimentary rocks.
- Plant fossils are not as common as animal fossils because the softer materials of plants are easily destroyed.
- Scientists today study fossils to learn about animals and plants that no longer exist. They can find out what type of food it ate and the size of the animal.
- By using an animal's foot print, scientists can tell how the animal moved.
- Fossils show how animals have changed over time.
- Scientists use fossils to tell what kinds of plants and animals lived together.
- Scientists can also use the layers to tell how old a fossil is. Layers of rocks that are deeper in the ground are older than layers above.

How Fossils are Formed

Step 1	Step 2	Step 3	Step 4
The soft parts of an animal decompose or rot away.	Hard parts of the animal, such as shells or bones, are buried under layers of sediment.	Over a long period of time, the bones and sediment turn to rock.	Movement of Earth's crust brings the rock closer to the surface. Wind and rain wear away the rock. Then, people can see the fossil.
