

Freedom of Obliviocy

Florida schools continue to widen the net when it comes to banning books due to an expansion of the “Parental Rights in Education” law, probably better known as the “Don’t Say Gay” law. The Escambia County School District seems to be leading the body count, with more than 1,600 books banned or under review as part of the banning process. In addition to the usual suspects (anything with an LGBTQ theme or any hint of “sexual conduct,” among other things), the most recent batch includes The Guinness Book of World Records, eight encyclopedias, and five dictionaries. PEN America, which is keeping a list of books being banned or challenged, has sued the district, joined by a group of authors, local parents and students, Penguin Random House, and the Florida Freedom to Read Project. (RC/WFLA Tampa) ... Once properly censored, the very slim book of words will go back on the shelf renamed as a Tionary.
